A New Voice

Damacene Yegabo in Numbi/Kalehe declared he did not know how to read or write, and also had a physical disability. After attending a Mercy literacy class, he can now read and write. "I have forgotten my malformation because I can read and write. I can lead a cell group/church and everybody is ready to listen to me. Children and adults, they sit around me and do not see my disability but want to listen as I can read and write and explain God's word," says Damacene.

2,221 BENEFICIARIES

Poverty is a powerful force that can keep generations bound in suffering. At Mercy, we dream of the day when the poor break free of poverty's grip so that there is hope and fullness of life for the next generation. Our Hope for Generations program utilizes a holistic strategy that focuses on empowering families in 7 areas that meet critical needs and the possibility of a bright future.

Spirits Lifted

Jeanne attends a small rural school in Northern Haiti. A highlight when Mercy Kidz staff visits these schools is updating photos of the students. It's not always easy to get a genuine, relaxed smile, but Jeanne's sweet spirit radiated on her face. Some would think it might be difficult for her to smile since she has no use of her legs and is dependent on someone to carry her to school and throughout the school day (the hilly school location makes a wheelchair unmanageable even if one was available). On photo day, the pastor proudly retrieved her from her classroom, and as he carried her they enjoyed a friendly, laughter filled conversation. It was obvious this was a daily occurrence. Mercy Kidz provides the opportunity for Jeanne to go to school, but it is her family and community that gives her the additional support she needs and why Mercy, inc. strives to provide hope for generations.

Finding Peace

Monoara Begum is a mother of 4 children. Her younger daughter Shila, reads in the nearest Madrasa (an Islamic school) where Mercy installed a water well. Collecting freshwater was challenging for Monoara. In her 30 years of marriage she has had to walk for miles every day to retrieve drinking water. She had to collect water, cook for the family, and prepare her husband for work and her children for school. All of these tasks must be done before dawn. Sometimes she cannot sleep peacefully for the stress of collecting water the next day.

After the well installation at her daughter's school, Monoara found peace in her mind. "I wonder how Talitha Koumi (Mercy's local partner) thought to install a deep tube well at the Madrasa? We never heard that people from other beliefs could help us! This is a beautiful moment for me, for the others too! If you want, you can share something more about Jesus".

Business as Mission

Mercy owns a for-profit business named 4Garb. 4Garb profits help Mercy accomplish our mission while providing quality products for sale in the US and jobs in poorer countries. One such example is the connection created between a clothing manufacturer in Asia and a retailer in the Pacific Northwest. This connection has helped the manufacturer increase sales and jobs. If you know of a retailer that might be interested in 4Garb's services, email us at 4garb@mercyinc.org.

Mercy also sells products made by artisans from struggling communities around the world through Mercyshops.org. These sales help to increase profitability and support micro business entrepreneurs.
